ANDREW J. PECK, United States Magistrate Judge:

Plaintiffs' papers opposing defendants' motion for summary judgment, recognize that many of plaintiffs' claims are based on Title VII, but are remarkably vague as to which plaintiffs, if any, received EEOC right to sue letters, and timely filed the original complaint within 90 days of receipt of the right to sue letters. The Court has referred to this deficiency several times in the past.

To bend over backward for plaintiffs, this Court gives plaintiffs until August 22, 2008 to do what should have been done ages ago – provide copies of the EEOC right to sue letters for each plaintiff. (Presumably, if counsel has not violated Fed. R. Civ. P. 11, he already has these in his file.) For each plaintiff who did not receive a Right to Sue Letter, the Court strongly suggests plaintiffs' counsel agree to voluntarily dismiss their Title VII claims (if counsel fails to do so, the Court will seriously consider sanctions under Rule 11 or 28 U.S.C. § 1927).

SO ORDERED.
